

Consequences of Policies Built on Fallacy

I can remember T.V. commercials going back at least 30 years in which some self-righteous liberal tells you in so many words that you're selfish and mean if you don't enroll in a program to pay money each month to support someone else's children half way around the world. This is not to lend aid in the aftermath of a natural disaster, but rather it is intended to (and does) function as ongoing financial support which has no end or positive results (like welfare). We just can't seem to connect the facts with the obvious conclusions; liberal policies and philosophies are flawed, do not work, and need to be swept away.

Feed starving people in Africa seemed like a noble cause to many. The contributions are of course in addition to the hundreds of millions of dollars of taxpayer money that the U.S. Government gives in aid to Africa each year. What favors have we done for the people of Africa? The commercials don't seem to have changed much, so it would seem not much has changed in Africa either. Since gaining their independence in the post-WWII era none have really been able to sustain themselves or even maintain a stable government. Decades of pumping our tax dollars into African socio-economic problems has accomplished one thing; it has allowed them to increase their population to levels (over 1 billion) they never could have otherwise achieved, nor can they sustain those levels without our regular shipments. What happens to them, when in the coming crisis, we are unable to sustain those shipments? It is estimated that 400 million people will die of starvation within the first year. I'm seeing detriments to our aid, not benefits.

African nations must stand on their own two feet before they can truly be free, and now standing on their own two feet will be catastrophically harder than it otherwise would have been. But they will none the less have to face it sooner or later. African countries are not by any means the only countries that have been "aided" in this fashion, but they are the most acute example.

In summation; The U.S. Government is bankrupt, hundreds of millions of taxpayer dollars are sent to Africa on an ongoing and ever-increasing basis, this aid only serves to set the African people up for a bigger fall, and to top it all off most Africans tend not to like the U.S. or Americans. That would be like borrowing money from the bank to support your neighbor's drug habit, a neighbor who disliked you to boot.

Liberal policies have created a similar situation in the U.S. with the entitlement programs. When these programs came about under President Johnson, the poverty rate in the U.S. was 14%, and after 46 years of bankrupting the nation to fund these entitlements, the poverty rate is 14.3%. The fact that flawed policies would be allowed to continue on through multiple generations without any positive result at all really is a testament to how little wisdom with which the world is ruled.

Please, do your own research and draw your own conclusions; savethefutureofamerica.org is here for the many Americans looking for some rhyme or reason in this turmoil. Our beliefs are founded on facts and function in unison with human nature, natural laws, and common sense.
